

What we do

Part of Canada's foreign affairs and development efforts, IDRC invests in knowledge, innovation, and solutions to improve the lives of people in the developing world.

IDRC supports research in developing countries to create real and lasting change. This knowledge can be used as a tool for addressing pressing global challenges. We share it with others by:

- providing developing-country researchers with financial resources, advice, and training to find solutions to local problems;
- sharing our knowledge with policymakers, researchers, and communities around the world;
- fostering new talent by offering fellowships and awards; and
- putting new knowledge into the hands of those who can use it best to address global challenges.

Careers

IDRC is home to people who share a passion for international development research. With the right support and the right people, development research makes a real difference. We look for employees who truly believe that innovation and knowledge can solve some of the world's most critical development challenges.

We have more than 350 dedicated employees who speak more than 25 languages. They work from five offices around the world, in Ottawa, Canada; Amman, Jordan; Montevideo, Uruguay; Nairobi, Kenya; and New Delhi, India. Our cultural diversity enables us to build strong connections with research communities and decision-makers who have a need for the research we fund.

Career opportunities are varied and range from program officers who support researchers in developing countries, to administrators who help manage our operations.

Diversity is key to our success

We value a diverse workforce and are committed to achieving employment equity. If you are an Aboriginal person, a member of a visible minority group, a person with a disability, or a woman, we especially encourage you to apply.
