Like our geographical footprint here in Canada, our work is diverse. From automated light rail networks to international airports and clean power to community development. This mix of challenges, geologies and cultures requires a vast range of backgrounds and knowledge.

That's one reason why diversity is important to us. It enhances our ability to understand our clients and communities - especially under-represented groups. So we can create more sustainable, sensitive and inclusive solutions.

Yet ED&I is about much more than business performance. It's about creating a more welcoming place to work, where everyone feels valued and free to share ideas regardless of background or seniority.
